Eight babies are born every day with a heart defect in Australia. Childhood heart disease is the largest cause of death in children under the age of one in Australia. Four precious lives are lost each week.

Childhood heart disease is a lifelong disease; there is no known cure. Approximately 32,000 Australian children have childhood heart disease. There are more than 32,000 adult Australians who have lived with a heart defect since childhood. Childhood heart disease can go undiagnosed until adulthood. Childhood heart disease is not the result of lifestyle factors.
